

BURNOUT

Can Take You Down

Great Expectations!

OK! Once upon a time, you were enamored with the idea of becoming a physician, actually dealing with the wellness of your patients. Right?

So, off you went, into four years of college, four years of medical school, and a long internship, all of which amounted to a substantial monetary investment. (2017 statistics indicate an average of $180,000.00 per physician.)

The art of practicing medicine is fast evolving into a commodity service.

Unfortunately, the real world's view of practicing medicine did not even come close to your idea of healing people and making their lives better.

Daily, you face a laundry list of exasperating interruptions in your practice.

- You cannot make independent decisions about what is best for each patient.
- Third parties set rules about length of hospital stays and choice of treatments.
- Keeping electronic health records and documenting quality measures devour hours that you feel should be devoted to your patients.
- Government regulations and contracts with third parties determine the size of your paycheck.

In addition, with each patient, worry about being sued can prevent you from using all but the most conservative treatments.

It is no wonder that the burden of stress drags you down.

Statistics claim that, for an average of 400 physicians a year, the stress grows, like a malignant tumor, to the point where they commit suicide. You certainly don't want to be in that group! As a physician, what can you do?

You need to “vent your spleen” and unwind. . . you need to talk to somebody you can trust.

Winning Focus, Inc. provides a proprietary protocol that is confidential, nonreportable, and an excellent source that provides the understanding you need to overcome burnout. Communication is by appointment.
